"A Hero is someone who has given his or her life to something bigger than oneself."
- Joseph Campbell

The bravest are surely those who have the clearest vision of what is before them, glory and danger alike, and yet notwithstanding, go out to meet it." -- Thucydides, Ancient Greek historian and author, 460-404 BC.

To the families of the fallen:

I can't even begin to imagine what you are going through right now but I know that we are all mourning your loss. These men were so brave and such good people every day they walked this earth. We are all proud of them and proud to be connected to them. I want to tell you that the support for your families is strong and is coming to you from all over the world. We care about you and we want to remind you to never give up. I am sure times will be hard... don't back down! Face life every day with the courage that your loved ones showed on that fateful day. They would tell you to push on and be strong – for your children, for yourselves. Remember the good times – laugh, be happy and thankful for the good times that filled (and will continue to fill) your lives. You have a nation full of love for these men and for your families... We are proud of them, and of you. Be proud of these heroes! Share their stories let the memory of these men live on to inspire others to be great in life. Tell your children of their fathers' bravery. Tell the children about the love and respect that these men had for the women in their lives... and the love they had for their children. Be thankful for every happy moment made special by these wonderful men and share the love that came from these moments every chance you get. Let the beautiful memories of these men live on in your hearts forever.

I am proud of these men. Our nation is proud of these men. They will be forever in our hearts.

Love,
