Gateway to the future from students

The year 1966 was a time when Thunderbird students gathered at international dinners to feast on baked pig and to listen to the strains of Joseph LoPiccolo's accordion while "wine merchants" peddled their wares. The Prairie Dogs intramural football team emerged victorious and Colorgraphic Club members shared slides and experiences from around the globe.

Today, Class of 1966 graduates are banding together for a different cause — to raise funds for construction of an entrance on Greenway Road which will serve as the main gateway to the campus and as the starting point for the new perimeter road that will loop the campus. Consisting of a landscaped median and large sign, the entrance will be constructed at the current site of the Thunderbird Management Center building.

The idea for the project blossomed last fall at the 20-year reunion of the Class of 1966. On the third day of the reunion, the proposal for the project was announced and the first organizational meeting was held. Within a month, a $1,500 gift was received from a donor, and more than $5,000 was raised even before the formal appeal began, including a generous matching gift from the Kiplinger Foundation.

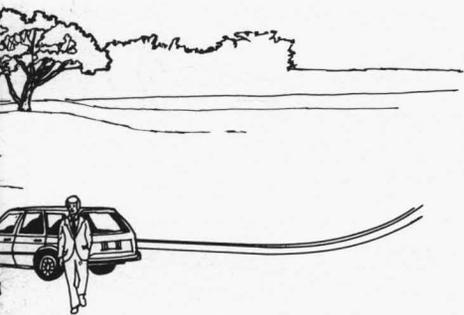

Heading the Greenway Entrance project is C. Michael Bennis, who served as chairman of the Class of 1966's 20-year reunion. Since his graduation from Thunderbird, Bennis has served as coordinator of alumni activities in Spain, Thunderbird Founders Club member, Annual Fund chairman, Presidents Council member, Alumni Education Counselor, New York phonathon volunteer, and director of the Thunderbird Club of New England.

"It's an excellent project," says Bennis. "It will greatly improve traffic flow and safety. Also, it's the most noticeable thing we could do as a class. It will be the first thing you see when you arrive on campus and the last thing you see when you leave.

"For 1980-1981, our class donated more money to Thunderbird than any other graduating class. We're asking classmates to come through again with this same kind of spirit and donate funds as soon as possible so that we can rapidly complete the project and provide safety benefits to the school."

of the past

Others active in the entrance project include: Lloyd Andrew Straits, II, who served as a charter member of the Founders Club, member of the Presidents Council, 20-year Reunion Steering Committee member, and member of the Alumni Association Finance Committee; Fred M. Smoot, who has actively supported the Presidents Council, the Honolulu alumni club, and the 20-year Reunion Steering Committee; and Jerry Rupp, former president of the Thunderbird Peru and Arizona Chapters, and currently chairman of the board of the Arizona Chapter.

"First impressions are important, especially for people who may be on campus only for a short time, such as international visitors, diplorats, potential students, corporate recruiters, and businessmen," says Straits. "By contributing to the Greenway Entrance project, alumni can help create a better impression and improve the physical stature of a school in its 41st year."

"Hopefully, everyone can find a way to maximize their contributions for a successful project," says Smoot.

The entrance project is the second class-sponsored project, following in the footsteps of the Class of 1960 Academic Mall.

"These projects are the start of a trend," says Bobbie Boyd, director of Alumni Relations, "as alumni are increasingly joining together to fund projects that will enhance the physical beauty of the campus.

"In the past, donors' efforts focused primarily on strengthening curriculum-related areas; but now, with a strong academic core established, they are able to help upgrade the school's grounds and facilities, and contribute to the visual impact of the campus," says Boyd. "These projects are a way for alumni to identify a need on campus and then do something about it. It's a great way for them to be involved in the school's development, and they can see the tangible results of their donations and support." The Class of 1966's current fund-raising target for the entrance is about $65,000 over a three-year period.

For those who participate in the Presidents Council, there is an added bonus, as they can credit their donation to the project and receive dual recognition.

Library begins a new chapter

he addition of a new book on a library's book shelf is usually a common occurrence — done without fanfare or recognition. However, the Thunderbird community recently took special note of an addition made to the Barton K. Yount Memorial Library when the campus library added the 100,000th volume to its collection. The library was recognized for this achievement May 22 at the Fortieth Anniversary Pioneer Reunion held on campus.

"Reaching this goal certainly was a surprise to me," said Miss Lora Jeanne Wheeler, chief librarian. "The School has worked hard to continually improve the library, but I thought it would take us much longer to collect the number of volumes that we have today."

A library collection of 100,000 volumes is an accomplishment when one considers that in 1946, when the school was founded, the library contained only 2,664 volumes. Because of a limited budget, several of those volumes were borrowed from professors' private collections.

The library was first located in what is now the storage hangar, in the present location of the campus bookstore. A periodical reading room was in the present-day office of the ASLC student-body president at the same location.

"When the school first opened, General Yount would always take visitors to look at the library," recalled Berger Erickson, Thunderbird executive vice president. "He was quite proud of the library even though it was very small. Of course, there really wasn't much else on campus at that time. All the other buildings were either barracks or hangars."

with 100,000th volume

The library building, completed in September 1970, carries the name of the School's founder.

▲ The Periodical Room houses 1,015 volumes, of which 132 are foreign publications.

▲ Russell Sears, assistant librarian, and Susan Bledsoe, acquisitions librarian, use the OCLC system to search a book title for bibliographic information.

cate books were requested from a variety of organizations: Hispanic Foundation, Pan American University, Library of Congress, New York Public Library, and the Woodrow Wilson Memorial Library. According to Erickson, "With such a limited budget, we had to try and get books from as many different resources as possible. We couldn't rely on the faculty for all of the library's books."

By 1950, the library had collected 5,900 books and subscribed to 124 publications. During this same time period, books that had been borrowed from professors were either returned or purchased by the library.

During the next 12 years, the library slowly expanded under a limited annual book budget of approximately $7,500, according to Miss Wheeler. "The administration was always supportive; it's just that there wasn't a great deal of money to be invested in the library," she said. As a result of the limited budget, the library continued to solicit book donations and documents from sources throughout the world.

The library received its first significant financial contribution after a library memorial fund was established to honor Dr. William Schurz, past president of the School and director of the Area Studies Department. After his death in 1962, alumni donated approximately $20,000 to a memorial fund in his honor, with the money designated to be used for the library.

"Receiving this much money was a tremendous boost for the library, and enabled us to make substantial purchases to the library's collection," said Miss Wheeler, adding that "after receiving this amount of money, it was virtually impossible to go back to a budget of $7,500."

The collection of books increased to more than 22,000 by 1967. The following year the board of directors began to consider capital improvement plans for the campus. "The board considered the construction of a new library building to be a top priority item for the school," said Erickson. "The major concern was funding the construction."

According to Miss Wheeler, initial funding was to be provided by a grant from the government. "Unfortunately, the government canceled all library construction grants just as we were submitting our proposal," she said. "The board, however, decided to go ahead and raise the money through private donations."

Construction of the $448,734 library building was completed September 1, 1970. Major financial contributors included The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, American Management Association, alumni, and the Thunderbird board of directors.

Dr. Ralph E. Ellsworth, director of libraries at the University of Colorado served as consultant prior to the construction of the new library. At his recommendation, a 25,000 square-foot building was constructed that would be large enough to hold 100,000 books. In addition to housing the library, 10,000 square feet of the building were allocated to Alumni and Career Services offices where they remained until 1977, when they moved into their present facility.

"The atmosphere on campus was very exciting as the library was being constructed," said Miss Wheeler. "This was the first new construction on the campus, so it really was a big step for the school."

Today the library has an annual book budget of $100,000, allowing for the purchase of approximately 5,000 new books a year, many of which are annual statistical reports. Approximately 54 percent of the books ordered each year are based on recommendations from the World Business, Modern Languages, and International Studies departments. The library also subscribes to 1,015 periodicals, of which 132 are foreign publications.

Miss Wheeler described the library today as more than just a business library, pointing out that approximately half of the books are social science in nature, which includes country studies' reports and economic studies.

"We are continually trying to increase the number of business books to our collection," said Miss Wheeler, "but the problem is they are so much more expensive than the other books. Our budget just doesn't allow us to purchase as many as we would like to."

To facilitate locating books or specific information not available in the library, three options are available: the OCLC system for inter-library loans, access to the Dialog network, or use of the Arizona State University library.

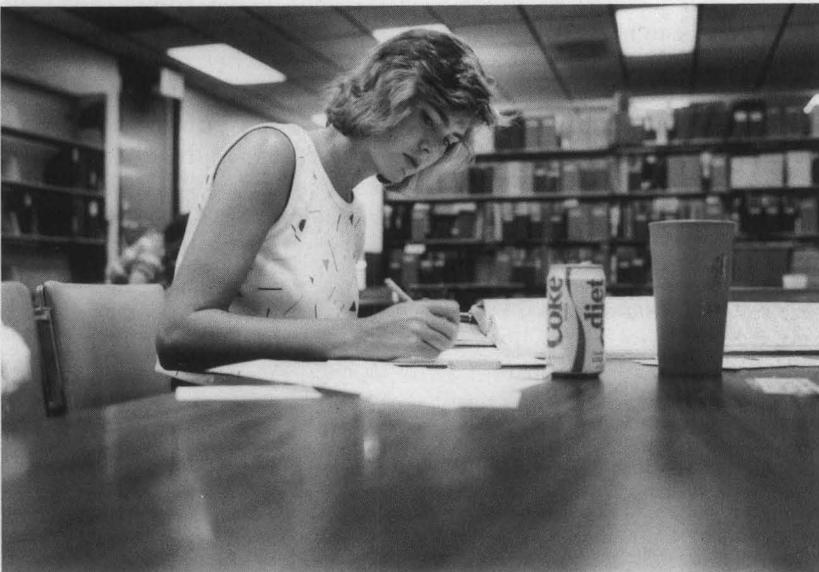

The OCLC system allows students to tap into 6,000 libraries throughout the country, according to Russell Sears, assistant librarian. He said the average waiting time for a book through the OCLC is approximately two weeks.

"The Dialog network, however, is a much quicker way to gather information," he said. "With Dialog, a student can get immediate information through a computerized system which connects 300 data bases from various sources." A fee is charged to the student based on the type of search needed.

"We are a small and very specific library which enables us to provide a great deal of detailed international information," said Miss Wheeler. "Our strengths are in the various business international publications that we subscribe to, in addition to the specific financial papers and statistical country reports. My personal goal is to see this be the best international library in the country."

For 33 years the major force behind the growth and success of the Barton K. Yount Memorial Library on the Thunderbird campus has been Miss Lora Jeanne Wheeler, chief librarian since 1953.

Miss Wheeler, a petite, modest woman, is often hesitant to discuss her accomplishments at Thunderbird; but one only has to trace the history of the library to see that she has made a powerful imprint on the Thunderbird community.

She admits that the library has changed drastically since she first arrived, but she gives most of the credit to the support she has received from the administration.

From the very beginning the administration worked closely with her to improve the library. "I remember Dr. Carl Sauer (president 1953 - 1966) helping me make homemade binders for magazines and books, because the School couldn't afford to have someone else do the job," she recalls.

"When I first arrived at the School, I don't think I would have stayed if I hadn't already signed my contract," she admits. "The condition of the library — which consisted of homemade bookshelves, few supplies and no room for storage — certainly wasn't what I was expecting. However, the condition presented a lot of challenges that a librarian would never find at other libraries.

"After getting through the first year, I enjoyed the challenges of the library, so I just decided to stay on. Of course I had no idea I would be here this long," she says.

Miss Wheeler's experience prior to her arrival at Thunderbird included eight years as reference and circulation librarian for the University of Utah, where she received her bachelor of arts in education. She also holds a bachelor of science degree in library sciences from Columbia University.

"The transition to a small library was difficult for me at first, but I eventually got used to the fact that the library at Thunderbird was not going to be like major university libraries," she says. "The challenges provided by such a small library tipped the scale for me. In addition, working at a smaller library provided a great deal of diversification, which for me is one of the joys of a smaller library."

Diversification is something that Miss Wheeler also carries into her personal life. For the past 15 years she has pursued a ballroom dancing hobby which has taken her to competitions throughout the United States and internationally.

To stay in shape for the semi-annual competitions, she says that she rehearses two or three nights a week. Commitment to her hobby paid off last spring when she received third place at a competition in Las Vegas.

"I've always been more of an intellect and have depended so much on my mind," says Miss Wheeler. "The dancing has been a real challenge for me."

Miss Wheeler also has excelled with her intellectual capabilities. In 1969 her book, entitled International Business and Foreign Trade — A Guide to Information Sources, was published. The 221-page book provides a bibliography and short summary of publications and books that have a connection with international business.

Miss Wheeler says that the three-year project was like an albatross. "It seemed like I could never take a night off without feeling guilty because I wasn't working on it. I guess it was much like school. When I finally saw the book in print, it was quite a thrill. Several of the students on the campus purchased the book and then asked me for an autograph. I was very flattered."

In addition to writing her own book, Miss Wheeler also compiled the bibliography for the International Trade Handbook, which is used at various schools that teach courses relating to international business.

Back at the Barton K. Yount Memorial Library today, Miss Wheeler's preference for diversification is evident in her working style as she manages a staff of 24, including 18 work-study students.

"Miss Wheeler has been an extremely dedicated librarian and has always pushed for the improvement and expansion of the library," according to Dr. Berger Erickson. "She's always dug right in and worked to achieve her goals."

"My job is almost like having several different jobs without having to move," concludes Miss Wheeler. She attributes this belief to the diversity of her work and to the growth of the library that she has helped develop.
